

Ocean Life Dioramas

Artists often use photographs for reference when they are creating artwork since careful observation is a good way to learn. We looked at photographs of life on tropical ocean reefs and under Alaskan oceans while we drew the creatures and habitat for our dioramas.

We thought about these things as we worked:

- To create a center of interest, we made something large.
- To create a sense of space, we overlapped.
- To create a sense of rhythm & movement we repeated similar shapes, lines or color.

Ocean Life Dioramas

Artists often use photographs for reference when they are creating artwork since careful observation is a good way to learn. We looked at photographs of life on tropical ocean reefs and under Alaskan oceans while we drew the creatures and habitat for our dioramas.

We thought about these things as we worked:

- To create a center of interest, we made something large.
- To create a sense of space, we overlapped.
- To create a sense of rhythm & movement we repeated similar shapes, lines or color.

Ocean Life Dioramas

Artists often use photographs for reference when they are creating artwork since careful observation is a good way to learn. We looked at photographs of life on tropical ocean reefs and under Alaskan oceans while we drew the creatures and habitat for our dioramas.

We thought about these things as we worked:

- To create a center of interest, we made something large.
- To create a sense of space, we overlapped.
- To create a sense of rhythm & movement we repeated similar shapes, lines or color.